

Poems rising

- Matthew GIROUX
- Public Writer
- www.howwrite.net
- www.liberlog.fr
- License : Creative Common by SA

Poems rising

With :

- Music we learn to live socially
- Architecture we learn to build a society
- Poetry strengthens our ego building to understand ourselves, in order to understand others

We use our will to learn, to build, or to grow seeking our truth.

Poems rising

We tell ourselves that :

- Scholars are incomprehensible
- We understand those who are like us
- We don't keep everything back

How do I know what to do?

- Trying to understand each other through poetry

Poetry then makes it possible to understand others.

Poems rising

The self-taught :

- Knows how to grow himself writing
- Says to himself "yes..."in order to arrive at an objective he wants to realize
- Can become a writer or teach others

Do you know how he does it?

He seeks with the past to build the future, through passion, which is the will to achieve short and long-term goals.

Poems rising

The writer :

- Has an oversized ego
- Grows writing, probably through poetry
- Asks questions about him without being afraid

Why is he not afraid?

Because he knows understanding himself is essential.

Poems rising

Poetry allows :

- To convince yourself and convince others
- To understand each other and to teach others
- To face ourselves without being afraid of us

We write in rhymes about our moment's thoughts.

Then the desire to grow and the writing change us little by little.

Poems rising

Poetry is :

- Rhymes and metaphors that guide us
- A beautiful text to hear and understand
- With few hiatus, with therefore few vowel confrontations
- Can be sung as a ballad or with notes

We start from known notes, then our poetry invents notes to create songs.

Poems rising

Conclusion

Poetry is above all writing to understand us, with simple rhymes.

So it's about writing to keep track of us in order to understand ourselves later as another.

We are then less afraid of us.